of the bona-fide old-timers," was the comment.

He was known sall through North Paterson, N. J., as "Judge." To the end he was a laugh-raiser. He died as he had lived-trying to amuse others. The gay old minstrel was showing his grandson that a man may be seventy-seven and still be young. He jumped over several chairs and then sank fainting, and in a short time was dead of heart failure.

Rea was the last of the old Christy Minstrels. He was part owner in the organization and a singer of rare repute. He sang before Louis Napoleon and other monarchs. He was rich.
